About the Cookbook

In June 1904 the PWMU General Committee received correspondence from a Melbourne publisher inviting them to work together in the production of a cookbook for general sale. It took some time for the first edition to be ready for printing, but printed it was; selling very well. Since then there have been 5 editions. Each edition has been reprinted many times - the most recent being released in 2013 and reviewed and refreshed in 2021. In fact, the PWMU Cookbook has never been out of print, which makes it the oldest continuous cookbook in Australia. Quite a record! And, in 2024 we will be celebrating having been in print for 120 years!

Royalties received are distributed equally between the PCV & UCA in Victoria, with the PWMU and UCAF each determining where the funds they receive will be distributed, to support mission based ministries/activities.

There have been opportunities where the cookbook has provided material support to communities suffering hardship. At the time of the Black Saturday (2009) and the Black Summer fires (2020), the committee was able to donate copies of the Cookbook to those families who had lost their primary place of residence. We continue to seek ways to support communities affected by such disasters.

The PWMU Cookbook Committee regularly reviews the recipes to ensure that it remains a popular choice for people learning to cook or seeking basic recipes for their busy lives.
